

“Compared to all the other offices I have visited including the local hospital, it was ...

Night & Day”

Service Matters ... Immediate Access

When you or your physician determine that it is time for you to have physical therapy, the LAST thing you should hear from your physical therapist is, “We can’t get you in until the end of next week” or “We’re really busy right now so we will have to put you on our waiting list”. At Allegiant Physical Therapy, our policy is to offer every patient an Initial Evaluation appointment within 24-48 hours. Here’s why ...

As soon as you sustain an injury or develop a painful condition, the way you move and use that injured body part begins to change. Because you may have pain, stiffness, or swelling, your body begins to make compensations all on its own. Some of them you may notice and some you may not. Regardless, things can start going sideways in a hurry.

Though this can be viewed as the body’s natural response to injury, in the end it can be counterproductive. These are the types adaptations that can help make newly occurring pain conditions turn into chronic ones that are more challenging to deal with.

The bottom line is: the sooner you can get my help with your injury, the more you will minimize the roadblocks to recovery and relief of your pain.

So at Allegiant PT, you’ll be offered an initial appointment promptly.

“I noticed a significant difference right away.

I came to Allegiant Physical Therapy for my neck and headache pain after having received care at the local hospital. There were differences in the way the therapist at Allegiant approached my problem that were immediately apparent to me. First, the evaluation and the process of identifying the problem areas were much more comprehensive than the others. He listened to all my concerns and did an assessment that I thought was very comprehensive. It seemed like he was trying to get to the root cause of my problem. When I started my P.T. Program at the hospital, it seemed like they had a pre-determined treatment plan based on my diagnosis which they began to use without even evaluating me. At Allegiant, their approach was to thoroughly evaluate the patient the before coming up with a treatment plan. To me, this seems like the best approach to ensure no problem areas are missed, yet, I have only experienced this with Allegiant. Second, my treatment is always customized and changes based on how I’m feeling and how I’m responding to treatment rather than by sticking with a standard treatment that may not take into account my pain or the challenges I face throughout the week.

My experience at Allegiant was also made noticeably more convenient by other factors. I was able to get my first appointment quickly compared to other offices. They say they never use a waiting list to get in. The Office Manager was very knowledgeable about my insurance, and explained my coverage to me and was always accommodating with scheduling. I also loved that the parking was so convenient.

I have been very impressed with the level of care I have received at Allegiant P.T.”
